"bemoaning the absence of the lover", and ital, "love quarrel/sulking".³⁴ These will come under the aesthetic code of the semioticians. He also enumerates three more concepts that are found in the poems, viz. mutal, "space and time", karu, "characteristic regional features", and uri, "distinctive erotic mood".³⁵ These are important in recognizing the themes as well as the particular *tinai*s of the poems. Another concept which was associated with tinai is the names belonging to the different regions. This is called tinai nilai-p-peyar.³⁶ But one is not sure whether this formed a basis for identifying the tinai. Another basis for identifying the tinai is referred to as silirai unnam, "indirect suggestion through skilful employment of telling comparisons".³⁷ These are based on the regional characteristic features, i.e. karu except the divinities of the region, as explained by the scholars (on poetics).³⁸ This indirect suggestion is further divided into five kinds, viz. utpatti, "suggestive meaning", unnam, i.e. silirai unnam already referred to, ciftu, "indication in suggestion", naku, "rejoicing", and crappu, "emphasis".³⁹ All these help not only to recognize the tinai but also the meaning intended in the poems.

There are certain themes which are common to both akan and puram themes. These are enumerated in the chapter on puram themes.⁴⁰ For example, the Vela's possessive dance is explained as common to both akan and puram poems. There are a few verses which explain the kaikkilai, "unreciprocated love" and peruntinai, "improper love" themes.⁴¹ All these go to show that Tolkappiyar's primary goal is to identify first the tinai of the poem. The next level is the identification of voice, since all these poems are in the form of dramatic monologues. Tolkappiyar uses the terms karu, "utterance", for the akan poems and kurru, "subject or theme", for the puram poems. The karus of the main characters are listed in chapters like Akattinai-y-iyal, "chapter on akan categories", Kalainiyal, "chapter on clandestine love", Karpiyal, "chapter on wedded life", for the akan division and the kurus for the puram division are listed in the Purattinai-y-iyal, "the chapter on exterior categories". Next is the chapter named Poruliyal. This really deals with the meaning of the texts along with other conventions followed in literary texts. The first verse explains that the meaning of the text will not change because of metrics and other syntactic deviations.⁴² The important verse on itai, "suggestion", explains that it is attained via the theme of the poem. Another verse states that extended meaning
