Book Proposal: A Teachers' Film Guide for Using Feature Films in the Classroom

Rationale:

After using films in my classroom curriculum, as part of my film appreciation course, history and English courses and for analytical writing assignments, I created a format for writing a film guide for teachers. I have observed that many teachers would like to use feature films to enhance the curriculum, explore a particular theme and improve certain academic skills, but some lack the film knowledge, experience or some teaching techniques to do so.

My film guidebook proposal for teachers includes 250 excellent teaching films for the classroom categorized by theme, film teaching tips, activities for developing analytical writing skills, how to write a movie review, one complete curriculum-based model teaching unit, 50 film class teaching activities other helpful hints in teaching film, a brief listing of other fine teaching films, a list of films for fun, plus a special section of teachers' picks for excellent classroom films.

I have discovered that with my own students, an excellent teaching film not only captures their attention, but also brings out many academic skills that may not happen with other subject matter. Some students who do not fare well in routine classroom situation discover that they have a special analytical ability with films, and, with the film-viewing and discussion experience, they are inspired to use analytical writing skills not developed previously. Ironically, in this way, some students are working on their skills harder than they realize and often pursue learning on their own based on a particular film.

Most of the content in this book proposal is suited to middle school and high school and some college levels. Many of the activities can be adapted to the various levels. Most important, I have tried to develop a guide that would be user-friendly and suited to many levels of student ability. I have included a table of contents, sample sections and activities.
